3. Ever since the coalition government was formed the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has been attempting to complete its domination by infiltrating its people into the non-Communist parties and through these into all government posts of any importance which it does not already control absolutely. The infiltrating Communists attempt to maintain the secrecy of their real allegiance even when successful in their penetration. So far this infiltration technique has not been successful, because the non-Communists are in several cases on the alert.

4. The CCP has stated that it will launch a true socialist state as soon as the time is ripe. When the time arrives the CCP will purge the government of all non-Communist parties and individuals.

5. Such a purge will not involve mass trials, assassination, and general blood letting. To the contrary, it will be done in a typically Chinese way, as follows:

- a. The infiltration process described in paragraph 3 will be greatly intensified.
- b. In certain cases the CCP will go directly to non-Communist individuals holding government posts and say, "You must do exactly as we say from now on, or you may retire." The non-Communist individuals as practical Chinese will realize that the coalition game is played out and will almost without exception keep their jobs and obey. They will feel that a man must eat and that a man likes to wield some power - even if he must swing it in a dictated direction. A very few may choose to retire.
- c. Finally the CCP will dissolve the non-Communist parties, inviting them to come into the CCP en bloc and stating simply that with the socialist state in the offing there is no longer any need for other parties.

6. This general explanation of a non-violent purge would not necessarily be the pattern of a purge of the CCP itself.
